Unearth Strange Skull In Gravel Pit Near Irma

(From The Viking News)

While working in a gravel pit a mile and a half east and south of Irma last week, Bud Hanson unearthed an object that resembled the skull of a prehistoric cave man. It was discovered at a depth of about six feet and was petrified. The lower part of the jaw was missing but the upper part was pretty well preserved. In some aspects the skull could also have been that of an ape. Bud is sending the specimen to the Alberta University for examination. It may be that the gravel pit may reveal further specimens of some prehistoric race that succeeded the Indians that roamed the vast Canadian plains.

"SENTINELS ON THE HORIZON"

Nineteen years ago, when the price for tractor fuel was regarded as too high in relation to wheat at 60 cents a bushel, Saskatchewan farmers raised $32,000 to start Consumers Co-operative Refineries Limited, the world's first co-operative refinery. The money was enough to build a small refining plant on the northeast outskirts of Regina. In May, 1935, the plant began operations, with a daily capacity of 500 gallons.

Today the Co-op Refinery plant has a net value of $10,000,000, possesses the very latest in catalytic cracking equipment, and has a capacity of 12,000 barrels a day. It is capable of processing 110,000,000 gallons of refined products a year.

Forty-one local associations of farm operators were serviced in the first year, of petroleum sales. Today there are 428 such local associations.

The Co-op's tremendous growth in less than two decades was recalled by Premier T. C. Douglas on Wednesday, August 15, at the official opening of the expanded and modernized refinery facilities that cost $7,500,000. With Mr. Douglas on the platform were many of the men, and women, who first started the project. Dedication Day, coinciding with Saskatchewan's officially proclaimed "Co-operative Day," attracted hundreds from all parts of the province. Main theme for the celebration was Co-op members were "These Things We Own."

A souvenir booklet, called "The Co-op Story," called for a description of the lower that dominate the skyline, tells in picture and word the life story of the plant. In 1940 the combination skimming and cracking plant had a 1500-barrel daily capacity. By 1942 the daily capacity had increased to 2000 barrels. In 1951 the capacity was nearly tripled to allow an output of 6000 barrels a day.

The yearly increase in production is actually the story of the farmers' changeover from horses to tractors in the last two decades of rapid expansion of power-farming in Saskatchewan. By increasing its output of refined products to keep pace with mechanized agriculture's demands for high grade fuel, oils and greases the Co-op Refinery has at the same time, helped to speed still faster the modernization of farming operations.

Not only in production of finished products, but also in use of raw materials, has the Co-op kept pace with the times. The little plant in 1935 imported its crude oil from Oklahoma and Texas wells. Now the refinery draws supplies from the inter-provincial pipeline and has seven producing wells in Alberta. The refinery also is playing its part in Saskatchewan's oil exploration program.

Visitors on a conducted tour of the plant saw the latest type of instrument controls, including automatic furnace firing. The master control equipment for all new units is housed in a centrally located control room, which makes possible full co-ordination between the various refining process and the operating personnel. Air condensers and coolers on all major units reduce water scale and salt deposits and thus cut down on operating expenses.

The air blower and gas compressor units are driven by electric motors that receive current from two separate supply circuits. There are automatic switchovers from one circuit to the other in case of power interruption on one line.

There is a completely new marketing area setup. The tank truck, tank car and lubricating oil loading facilities can handle 500,000 gallons of products a day.

When H. L. Fowler, secretary for the refinery organization, pulled the switch to officially open the new catalytic cracking plant he could boast of equipment able to produce the highest quality products, including all grades of gasoline, distillate, kerosene, diesel fuel, furnace fuel, heater fuels, propane and bunker fuels. Member of the first board of directors and general manager of the first plant, he probably recalled the bold step in 1935 on $32,000 capital as he looked out at the results of that small beginning. "The 'Sentinels on the Horizon' are tangible signs of the farmer's faith in the future."

With an eye to this future the Co-op plant is located on a 360-acre site that will allow for still greater expansion. It has sewer and water connections and adequate spur tracks for more "Sentinel" towers.

"Radio astronomy" project to be launched in Australia

A major new project in "radio astronomy"—a science which some day may allow navigation of airplanes, ships and even guided missiles—is to be launched in Australia, it was disclosed recently.

"Radio astronomy" is the comparatively new art of detecting and studying celestial objects—including some that cannot be seen even with the most powerful telescopes—by means of radio waves they emit.

Disclosure of the Australian effort—erection of a giant radar antenna to "tune in" on known radio sources in space and perhaps find entirely new ones—was made in an announcement by the Carnegie Institution of Washington.

President Vanvor Bush of CIW said the Carnegie Corporation of New York had awarded a $250,000 grant to the Commonwealth Scientific and Industrial Organization in Australia to provide "part of the costs" of constructing the huge "radio-eye."

It will be a parabolic or bowl-shaped antenna—250 feet in diameter and 60 feet deep.

And it will share, with a similarly sized device now under construction in Britain, the distinction of being the world's largest and theoretically most versatile instrument in this field of research. There are about 20 "radio telescope" projects throughout the world.

No figures were immediately available on the total cost of this project, which will require about three years to build. The British "radio-eye" is expected to cost about $1,120,000.

Stated purpose of the Australian research is to advance man's knowledge of the universe.

But various scientists interested in "radio astronomy" say that aside from the primary objective of enhancing knowledge of the universe, the fledgling new science conceivably could contribute to:

(1) Improved weather forecasting; (2) improved methods of terrestrial radio communication; and (3) improved safeguards to aerial and maritime navigation during periods of storm or fog when ordinary celestial navigation is impossible.

These scientists say, too, that guided missiles, such as rockets—some of which can now be guided by radiation from visible stars—conceivably could be guided by radio waves from unseen "stars" at times when the ordinary visible ones were clouded from view.

The world's first atomic submarine cost $28 million.

Canucks popular in Japan

The army said recently that Canadian soldiers in Japan rate high with the natives.

The mayor of Kure, recently paid "glowing tribute" to the Canadian troops' good relations with the civilian population, and influential English-language newspaper, Mainichi, featured an illustrated story on the same theme.

"The Mainichi story says that what was once known as a 'city of crime' is now a peaceful town . . . three years after the signing of the peace treaty," the army said. "The paper points with pride to Kure's low crime record and commends the Commonwealth military police for their work."

"It also points out, however, that the troops make a sincere effort to get along with the Japanese Nationals."

The newspaper said of commonwealth soldiers: "Their sincerity in teaching Japanese a doctrine of Western humanism by their truly democratic attitude toward them are now learning the meaning of true democracy is to be commended."

Kenichi Matsumoto, Kure's mayor, recently presented an illuminated scroll of appreciation to Col. J. B. Allan, former commander of Canadian base units in the Far East. The mayor also gave Allan a 400-year-old fruit bowl, a relic of the ancient Ming dynasty.

The scroll said, in part, that the Canadian troops' contribution to "the cause of advancement of our Kure city were really great, quite unprecedented, and universally known to all the citizens."

MAKE A COFFEINER BENCH
COFFEE TABLE OF SOLID PINE

PATTERN 235

Modern home furnishing schemes frequently attempt to capture the simplicity of Japanese lines. This is the spirit of the reproduction of the standard equipment of a Japanese such as a coffee table. The design shown above follows in exact lines and proportions the design of a Japanese man's age. As this piece may have a prominent place as a coffee table a close-grained wood of cabinet-makers' grade should be used. The pattern for making this reproduction gives the saw lines for the simple curves, with sizes of the various parts. The assembling directions are shown in three-dimensional sketches. Pattern 235 is 35c and is included in the packet of Early American reproductions at $1.50.

TABLE TENNIS

The pattern which is available from the address below gives simple illustrated directions for making the essentials of table tennis. These are a regulation size table, the net and the rackets. No detail in the process of making this equipment is omitted. As the directions are extremely simple there was space on the pattern for an additional game which we call Get In Your Own House. Sketches for making the accessories as well as the rules for this game are included. Pattern for both games will be mailed for 35c. The number is 409 and may be ordered with the Rumpus Room Games Packet of eleven different family games for $1.50.

HE TOOK ONE BITE OF THE PINEAPPLE CAKE AND DECIDED HE COULDN'T WITHOUT ME!

Canadian naval training base largest in Commonwealth

CORNWALLIS, N.S.—Below the slopes of the South mountain where the fertile Annapolis valley meets the sea, the Canadian navy takes green youths and starts them on the road to seamanhood.

The 250-acre Cornwallis station is the largest navy training base in the British Commonwealth but it is much quieter than in the tense days of the Second World War. Even so, the parade square echoes during daylight hours with the tramp of 1,300 or 1,400 men in divisions as the ship's band blares brightly. Divisions are training units of from 60 to 70 men and are comparable to the army's companies.

New groups of downy-faced youths arrive each week and those who have had their strenuous hitch "before the mast" leave for advanced instruction at engineer, radar and other specialist schools across the country and at sea.

Cornwallis was first opened in 1943 at the height of the Second World War and by 1944 5,000 men were emerging fully trained every two weeks. Eleven thousand sailors were bedded down over the camp's sprawling acreage at one time.

Training operations were resumed in 1948 and the base currently accommodates 2,000 sailors at any one time with 1,400 graduating every 20 weeks.

Commanding officer Capt. James Pioneer of Saint John, N.B., thinks highly of the young men under his guidance. He has the pick of the crop for 70 percent of applicants are eliminated without ever donning navy blue. An additional 15 percent are weeded out during training.

Also instructed at the base are advanced students in various naval trades. The communications school is especially important, boasting a big building and all the latest electronic equipment.

A feature soon to be added for rookie sailors will be a two-week training cruise aboard the new frigate Buckingham, which will be permanently based at Cornwallis. The cruise will give the sailor a taste of the real thing early in his career.

He has a lot to learn. When he first "comes aboard" at Cornwallis he's assigned to a "ship. This is a barracks, but the ordinary seaman has to learn to keep it clean just if he were alone. He may be the Nootka, or Haida, or Sagwewey, or Tsewewey, was the young man soon to be the sailor's no room for sloppiness aboard. He washes and dries his socks, perhaps for the first time. He learns how to make up his bunk "the right way." When morning inspection comes and the petty officer finds his sheets are dirty he's penalized for not taking the prescribed daily shower.

The sailor hits the deck as the dawn mist pours out through Digby gut into the Bay of Fundy. After breakfast and inspection, his day is spent at drill, in classes, sometimes scrambling through obstacle courses among the trees and red earth of South mountain. He studies gunnery, navigation, engineering, ship maintenance, or a half dozen other specialties. And he learns to tie knots and climb the rigging as all sailors have done for centuries.

Upwards of 400 officers and petty officers train the recruits. The base provides work for some hundreds of civilians, many of them women, thus aiding the employment situation of neighboring communities like Bear River, Annapolis Royal and Digby.

As for recreation, the trainee needn't leave the ship to find it. Sailing is a popular pastime. Right on board ship, the sailor has a grocery store, canteen, movies and a recreation centre that boasts three big swimming pools. These are an attraction for civilian children, who are allowed to frolic in them regularly.

As for food, officers and men eat the same fare. The only difference is that officers are waited on.

Lake Ontario is the lowest of the Great Lakes. 3194

OUR COMPLETE SHORT STORY

Love on the border

By ANNA E. WILSON

THE grain whispered in the wheat field with a faint dry sound. It was Corrie Haswell's grain but Corrie wasn't happy as she stared at it. She ran brown hands through her hair, thinking regretfully of Rick.

It had been the year after the war that the tall Texan settled near the border and every fall since then every man around had loaded up his harvesting outfit when his own grain was in and headed south to help out Rick.

She'd vaguely resented this stranger and argued about it with her neighbor, Cliff Howard. "There's no call for you to take your outfit down there just to harvest his grain. Let him get men of his own kind."

"Why, Corrie," Cliff's tone had been mild. "It's not neighborly to feel that about Rick just because he lives on that side of the border."

So this year she had watched the combines steaming south without a thought for her own grain even when Howard called out, "Sure you'll be all right? That outfit of yours needs a good man to start it. It's in pretty bad shape."

She'd been sure she could make out because her cousin Milt and his friends had been coming west every year for their holidays and it had been relaxation for them to harvest her wheat. So she hadn't worried even while she was riding to town to meet Milt.

At the station there was no Milt but a regretful telegram. He couldn't have chosen a worse time to get himself mixed up in a traffic accident. Already the grain was over-ripe.

Maybe it had been a mistake not to have sold the farm when her father died. Even Cliff Howard had thought it was too big a job for a girl. But there had been her aged Aunt Priss and her small brother Jim who loved the west. Even Cliff couldn't tell her how she was to keep three people in the city on the wages she could earn. She put her hot head in her hands and sighed. If only Jim were old enough—

Over at the police station she tried to bargain with Logan. He rubbed his growing hair. "Even if it was legal, Corrie, to give you a couple of prisoners out of hand, I can't give you none right now."

To relieve her bitterness, she decided to send a telegram to Milt. Staring at the blank form, she could think of nothing to say. Her bitterness at Rick Rankin reached a climax and boiled over. She wondered what he'd say if anyone asked him to cross the border to help her out. Then she grew thoughtful. Maybe she'd been too hard on him. Maybe Cliff was right. She seized a spitting pen and wrote: "Please send some of the men back to harvest my grain." The girl who took the form looked surprised. "You sending this to your cousin, Miss Corrie?" "No," Corrie tottered up the words grimly and translated them into change. "Send it to Rick Rankin."

On the way home she wondered if she had wasted her money. Morning found her working the harvesting machine with a wrench.

At noon, she'd given up expecting help and was feeling the heads of grain grimly when she remembered that Cliff Howard had an old binder in his barn. She rode over and ruthlessly hitched her saddle horse to the contraption. To her surprise it moved. Later, its grumbling progress was helped along with a can of oil.

Somehow, uneven rows of grain began falling behind her. She knew only too well that with the old binder she couldn't harvest a fifth of her grain but she worked grimly. An hour later, she was right back sitting on the fence. The horse had slipped in a gopher hole and upset the binder, breaking the blade.

The wheat was swarming in a golden haze before her eyes. Corrie knew real despair. In 48 hours the crop wouldn't be worth harvesting and she saw no prospect of getting help before then. She confessed to herself at last that she had expected a lot of help from that telegram but if Rick Rankin had been intending to send help it would have arrived before now.

The wheat was bowed down with its own richness, the finest crop she'd grown. She couldn't bear the sight of it. She started her face in her hands. She buried at the drawing voice. "Now nothing could be so bad, ma'am, as to be worth all those tears. It's a mighty pretty place you got here and a fine kind of grain."

Rick Rankin's eyes were serious even when he smiled. "Come right along, ma'am, soon as I get your wife. Would have landed sooner but I was away hunting spare parts for a combine when it arrived. And now, ma'am, we're ready to begin when you say the word."

When Corrie said the word she was a bit shaky but she couldn't have told whether it was because her wheat was saved or because she was ashamed of her doubts about Rick. She was sure about weeks later, when border crossing had become a habit with him, that the way she felt about him now was right.

"Tell you what, Corrie," he drawled, with a long arm about her waist. "You and me getting married this way—Well, nothing's turned out to be a good or a bad thing."

FOUND LAMB IN POWER HOUSE

SPRINGFIELD, Mo.—Following the heavy rains recently, Andy Chalmers was curious to see how much water had run into the hole recently dug by the power crew. Imagine his surprise when he saw one of his finest lambs down there. He managed to pull it out with a lariet, after which he made sure the hole was covered. The lamb was none the worse for his experience.

THE TILERS

PAT FLETCHER is back on the job at Saskatoon's Golf and Country Club $3,000 richer and sporting the Seagram Golf Cup following his brilliant win in the Canadian Open Championships. Pat became the first Canadian in 40 years to take the crown by coming from behind in the final nine at Point Grey Golf and Country Club in Vancouver. Fletcher's 72-hole total for the open was 286, four strokes ahead of Toronto's Gordon Brydson and Bill Welch of Kennesaw, Wash.

Mountie met his bride on banks of the Old Man river

Chided by her friends about having her picture taken with a handsome red-coated "mountie," Mrs. James B. Moore vowed: "Oh, shaw! he is not half as good a man as my mountie . . ."

And no doubt Constable John Benham, RCMP, would agree for the man whose life's history he was recording for posterity was of old guard. He had served this world famous force years before the youthful officer, carrying on the traditions, was born. But the constable had some difficulty getting facts for the register, which lists the men who have served with the first contingent known as the North West Mounted police; the second The Royal North West Mounted Police and the RCMP. Mrs. Moore became sad and non-communicative at the mention of her late husband with whom she had shared 65 of the 83 years of her life.

He died recently. Their life had been filled with adventure, history and romance and it was difficult to go on alone but she found great solace in chatting with old friends of Mr. Moore's.

They had married May 3, 1888, at Fort Macleod where Mr. Moore was stationed with NWMP and in May of 1946 had celebrated their 60th wedding anniversary. Both had come from Ireland and though they were born and had lived in the same county, their paths had not crossed until they met at Macleod. The whirlwind courtship and subsequent nuptials resulted from a wager.

Their first encounter was on the banks of the Old Man river where the 19-year-old Colleen had gone to hide the copious tears brought on by loneliness. The mounties stationed in the barracks nearby looked on in sympathy but in those days it wasn't correct to approach a woman without an introduction. They got in a huddle—something must be done but who would speak to the newcomer first. They made a wager and James Moore won. A few days later he took the young woman for a carriage ride and to

The sound of wheels . . .

"It is like no sound ever heard in all your life, and makes your blood run cold. To hear thousands of those wheels all groaning and creaking at one time is a sound never to be forgotten."

A sound out of the history of the northwest. A sound that tells a story of the fur-trade, of exploration, and of settlement. The sound of pioneers invading a new country. The sound of the Red River carts. From 1801 until after the twin provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta were incorporated into the Dominion of Canada in 1905 the Red River carts piled from settlement to new frontiers. Now, as Saskatchewan celebrates her 50th anniversary, the almost forgotten sound of grassless wooden wheels turning on hubs of seasoned elm will be heard again—not in thousands, but some will locking together of the pieces. Getting the right kind of wood was another problem. Manitoba oak is the traditional material used for rind, spokes and axle, but the hubs must be made of sound and seasoned elm because oak will not make a large enough hub to take the necessary drilling. The frame of the rack is made of willow stakes, with planks for the flooring. In all, fifteen carts will be made this year. Those to be used as historic site markers will be set on a concrete platform 16 feet long, with uprights and gabled roof, and a 48-by-84 inch sign-board to tell the story of the site. Plotting the old trails became another intriguing research project. This task was given to Tom Petty, a retired school principal from Indian Head, and a man already steeped in Saskatchewan history. He began working from the route maps of early explorers and the first topographical series of the department of the interior in 1893. The trails as marked on these old maps were finally transposed onto a scaled map of Saskatchewan to plot the trails against present highways. Other clues, such as the early township surveys, were used to narrow the location down to a road or a fraction of a road. The Carlton trail from Fort Garry to Edmonton was probably the earliest trail to cross Saskatchewan, and it will be marked in two places. Other trails to be marked this year include: Battleford-Swift Current, Fort Walsh-Port Qu'Appelle, Wood Mountain-Port Qu'Appelle, Troy-Battleford, Fort Pelly-Moose Mountain, Fort Regina.

mark where the old territorial trade routes now cross modern highways, and others will receive their days of glory in parade and pageant.

Early in April of this year the first full-scale model of a Red River cart was completed in the wood-working shop of the Regina jail—a joint project of the historic sites branch, Department of Natural Resources, and the Saskatchewan Golden Jubilee committee. Harry Ford of Humboldt, who practiced the trade of wheelwright in England many years ago, is supervising this work. He spent many weeks of research in museums and archives until he was satisfied he had the correct measurements and construction details. He does all the careful hand-

Preserve our Heritage is the theme of the historic sites program, and indeed the theme of much of this jubilee program. It is expressed in the official history of the province, in the new provincial museum, and in the many local history projects that are being undertaken in communities throughout the province. In the words of the Honorable W. S. Lloyd, "We are going to leave the future by adding up the accomplishments of the past." Our jubilee will also emphasize the opportunities which lie ahead in such projects as competitions for Saskatchewan composers; writers and handicraft workers. Those interested in these competitions may write for details to the Saskatchewan Golden Jubilee Committee, 22 Government Insurance Building in Regina.

"This Fiftieth Jubilee," writes John Archer, Legislative Librarian, "is going to be a success—of that I am certain. The degree of success will depend on the depth and breadth. The more varied the diet—the way from popcorn and parmesan to history and hosannas—and the more extensive the coverage—provinces, community, club and individual—the greater, better, louder, more lasting will be our Jubilee."

Help For The Asthmatic

Vacation time for most Americans means fun, relaxation and the recouping of physical resources. But for two million asthmatics it can be torture. For them the summer can be a time of labored, gasping breathing. The return of balmy weather means an upturn in the number of asthmatic attacks as well as in new cases.

About one-third of the cases begin in children under ten. With the increasing birth rate the number of asthmatics is expected to rise.

Fortunately the average asthmatic attack is mild and is not dangerous. Frequent attacks, however, and forced breathing may stretch the lung tissue, possibly resulting in permanent damage.

Bronchial asthma is caused by the muscular constriction, and the congestion by mucus, of the smaller tubes in the lungs. Why the muscles constrict and why mucus is secreted from the glands that line the tubes remains a mystery, but in most cases an allergy is the culprit.

The best way to treat asthma is, of course, to find out what specific allergen is responsible and eliminate it. This is often easier said than done, for the allergen may be extremely difficult to uncover, and even if it is found, it may be difficult to avoid.

Medical treatment is, therefore, often the most practical approach to the problem of bronchial asthma. The adrenal hormone adrenalin has helped some asthmatics, but unfortunately it often builds a "tolerance" in the patient so that ever increasing doses are required. Antihistamines and antibiotics and, more recently, hormonal drugs like cortisone have been used with varying results.

Two drugs, ephedrine and theophylline, have been most helpful; the former acts to reduce the secretion of mucus, the latter widens the passageways of the bronchial tubes. These two drugs have been combined into a single tablet, Tebral, to which has been added a sedative to relieve the asthmatic of much of the tension associated with the attack.

This three-pronged answer to bronchial asthma has had excellent results. If taken at the first signs of an attack it often prevents the condition from assuming major proportions; taken during the attack it acts speedily to reduce the severity and to bring breathing back to normal. A specially coated form of the tablet, which does not take effect for several hours, when taken before retiring, protects the asthmatic from middle-of-the-night attacks.

Baseball Tourney Sunday, Aug. 29

(From The Viking News)

If real oldtime sunny Alberta prevails on Sunday, August 29, baseball fans will have a chance to air their lungs and enjoy a baseball tournament at the fair grounds.

Teams entered are from Vegreville, Forestburg, Ström and Viking. Games start promptly at 12 noon, 3 p.m. and 5:30 p.m.

The first contest will be between Vegreville and Ström with the second seeing Viking and Forestburg locking horns.

The teams are all loaded with baseball talent and this will probably be the last time this season that you will see them in action, unless we get some real summer weather in September and October.

The tournament is sponsored by the Viking Shamrocks who have a good record in spite of being plagued with injuries and wet weather whenever they tried to stage ball games on the local grounds.

Refreshment booths will be ready to serve you, so bring the whole family out for an afternoon of healthy recreation.

HARVEST WITH SAFETY

This year Harvest Operations will be a race against time. With men and machines setting a fast pace the risk of accidents increases.

Most accidents are caused by attempting to make adjustments with moving machinery and loose clothing. It is only common sense to stop machines completely before tinkering with parts. It's better to lose a few minutes than lose an arm, leg or your life.

CUT FIELD OF BARLEY ON AUGUST 14

(From The Viking News)

This is news. On Saturday, August 14, Harold Place cut a field of barley that averaged about fifty bushels per acre. This is perhaps the first grain cut in this district this year and if favorable weather comes along haying of coarse grains should become general in a week or two.

Saving money... and writing cheques

A bank offers you two types of deposit account, Savings and Current.

If you write cheques frequently, you will like the many advantages of a Current account.

If your main purpose is to save, to accumulate funds, it's good to have a Savings account.

The money you leave in a Savings account earns interest, and your bank book gives you an up-to-date, continuing record of your financial progress. If your funds are active, with frequent deposits and withdrawals, a Current account provides a special service; a monthly statement, together with your cancelled cheques—useful as receipts and a ready reference for budgeting, bookkeeping and other purposes.

KING GANAM

With his dark good looks, flashing brown eyes and Syrian background, King Ganam looks as if he'd be most at home dashing across the desert on an Arabian steed. But, says he, the only plains he has ever dashed across are those in Southern Saskatchewan, where he was born and grew up. He learned fiddle-playing by ear under old-time fiddlers in the Swift Current district when he was five and by the time he was nine he was playing at country dances. After his school days he organized the "Sons of the West" and had several radio shows. He began arranging and writing music as well, and in 1952 moved to Toronto to perform at Casa Loma. Sask. Indian gains success through gruelling hard work

Northwestern Saskatchewan is dotted with Indian reservations, whose people to a great extent still cling to an older way of life. Indications are that eventually our mode of living will be adopted by them: The tempo of the transitional period they are undergoing, from ancient tribal customs to wider acceptance of the white man's ways, has accelerated in latter years.

The changes wrought by time have been conflicting and often painful, but continue to go on, regardless of the resentment harbored by many Indian people.

Far from typical of these people is the story of John Albert, an elderly Cree Indian of the Sweetgrass reserve southwest of North Battleford. Nevertheless, the story of his ascent from a mere ward of the state to the owner of a prosperous farm may cast some light on the charges and counter-charges that these first inhabitants of our land are a shiftless lot always waiting for handouts; that government policy keeps the Indian down-trodden, and so on.

John was born on the Thunderchild Reserve, which then comprised most of the potentially rich farm land in the area around Regina. His father lived about a mile east of where the town stands today. The cards seemed to be stacked against young John right from the start. The head of the family contracted tuberculosis and had to be sent away for treatment. As the oldest boy in a large family of youngsters, John was obliged to stay home and fill the role of breadwinner, when inside a year or so he was able to go to school and gain an education. This didn't prevent him though from earning a good deal about money, and intensely to be able to go to school and gain an education. This didn't prevent him though from earning a good deal about money, and intensely to be able to go to school and gain an education.

His capacity for clear thinking was soon to be tested. He now testifies, more with regret than with bitterness, that it was impossible to sway his people from the course of action they were determined to follow, with devastating results. In 1908 a government representative came from Ottawa with a handsome offer to buy their land for an outright cash sum and make arrangements to transfer them onto surrounding reservations. Because they had little machinery or horsepower with which to develop their holdings, the majority clamored for acceptance of the cash settlement, thinking the money would last almost a lifetime. At meetings, John Albert argued passionately against the folly of such action, painting a picture of prosperity and contentment if the land were kept and developed by themselves, even though it would take many years. His pleadings fell on uncomprehending ears and the deal went through.

Within a few years, most of the Indians who had little or no knowledge in the management of money, were again desperately poor. The various reserves to which they had transferred were completely unproductive (as they are largely still today) for Indian ways of farming. Their inhabitants simply eked out an existence.

For 11 years Mr. Albert tried to make a go of things on the Moomsion reserve at Cochin. Reared on the fat of his efforts, but still undaunted, he transferred to Sweetgrass in 1920. There he found the soil heavy and much better suited for farming. The big drawback however, was that the land was almost totally covered with brush. With the help of his four sons, a few acres were cleared each winter then broken up the following summer, until in the late 30s about 400 acres were under cultivation.

Thereafter father and sons worked steadily through several winters cutting brush and selling the wood for fuel. After a hundred acres had been cleared, a deal was made through the farm instructor to have the land broken with the community farm's equipment; a crawler tractor, brush breaker, disc and so on. By way of payment, the first two crops were foregone by the Alberts. After the land reverted to their possession, money from crops was immediately used to buy more machinery and pay for additional breaking. Of late a brushcutter has been hired for clearing and they do their own breaking by putting steel wheels on one of the rubber tire tractors.

By such methods it has been possible to bring 600 acres, under cultivation and provide full range of power machinery (most of it bought second hand). Two big gas tractors are in use, two plows for summerfallowing, a ten-foot tiller and larger field disc, weed sprayer and various other miscellaneous equipment. Crop is sown in the fall after which a self-propelled combine is put on the job. Even a grain loader is used to take more of the back work out of grain handling.

The four sons are all married and have families. Three of them live in semi-detached houses close around the main farm, while the youngest one, just married last year lives with his parents. Each of the five men owns a 1-ton truck. This would appear uneconomical, yet with the different types of work going on at the same time considerable travelling needs to be done, therefore the trucks are deemed a necessity. Besides, the men like to take their families out once in a while too.

Although lacking in academic learning, John Albert impresses one as a deep-thinking individual applying a lot of common sense to the wearisome problems facing his race.

He can barely read or write yet with the help of his wife who took 12 years of schooling at a convent in Duck Lake, he has become one of the community's leaders. Mrs. Albert's help provides articulation to her husband's ideas.

The farm buildings are far from what is desired. The house is just an old log structure, no repair shop or tools are in evidence, nor is there a building to store machinery or a barn to properly keep stock. All these things are planned for in the near future. Up until the present time practically every bit of cash they had to be re-invested in machinery, at the expense of the home. He feels very strongly that there is too much disparity between the farmer's selling prices and cost of other goods, machinery in particular.

Learning through experience may be a good thing, but it is costly, John declares. He is of the opinion that farm instructors on the reserves could be of far greater help if they went around to all the farms, checking a man's methods and machinery and offering advice.

The cards are finally dropping in favor of John Albert in his long, uphill struggle for a decent living and a place in the sun.

Souvenir of Inauguration Day

Mr. Fred McGuinness, executive director of the Saskatchewan Golden Jubilee committee, is interested in finding out how many of these inauguration badges are tucked away with keepsakes and mementos throughout the province. This badge is owned by Albert Capling, Saskatchewan, a pioneer of the Western district. There must be a story, too, behind the curious error in spelling—"inauguration."

As Saskatchewan's fifteenth anniversary approaches, we will dust off our souvenirs of the past—both the tangible ones, and those intangible memories each of us treasures. Proud indeed will be those men and women who can say, "I was there when the province was born. I remember..."

When His Honor A. E. Forget was sworn in as first Lieutenant-Governor of Saskatchewan on September 4, 1905, he said in part: "I have seen the country grow from its birth and today I have the satisfaction of seeing, with you, it give birth to two fine provinces, which I am sure will in time take more than first place among the provinces constituting the Dominion of Canada." In 1955 we will celebrate the fulfillment in many ways of this prophetic vision.

The countryman gave a cry of joy. "Give me one," he said. Then after a slight pause, he said: "This takes time. We're not the wife's mother staying with us as well."

The master of the house, exasperated beyond endurance by the cooking, summoned the cook. After a long tirade upon her shortcomings, he pointed to the table.

"Look at that piece of bacon I've served your mistress," he stormed. "Absolutely uncuttable! And this piece I've taken for myself isn't much better."

Choirboy (to the vicar): "The choir is organizing a cricket team, sir, and we wondered if you would lend us the bats which the vergers says you have in the beiry."

Woman custom broker started from scratch

EDMONTON.—Gene Eby of Edmonton, one of Canada's few women custom brokers, rode the crest of Alberta's oil boom to a successful business career. "I used to look out of my window and see only men in the business world," says Eby, who believes there's "always room" for more of the fairer sex.

Backing up this philosophy with an astute business sense and her modest savings, Gene founded her own customs brokerage firm here six months after discovery of oil at Leduc in 1947.

Today she runs one of the leading customs brokerage firms in Canada, clearing through customs everything from drilling rigs and pipeline supplies to race horses.

The tall, attractive brunette is one of about 15 women customs brokers in Canada, but is believed the only one who started from scratch on her own.

Born and educated here, Miss Eby, now 37, went from high school to a secretarial course in keeping with an early ambition to be a stenographer. Early in her career she gained more than eight years' experience in customs brokerage through a major Canadian firm here for which she was office and credit manager.

Seven years ago she decided she wanted to be her "own boss." Edmonton was ripe for a third customs brokerage house when friends advised Gene to carry her experience in this line into a business of her own. She wasn't deterred by the fact that her two prospective rivals were long established and that one was so busy he had not taken a holiday for 20 years.

"So I hung out my shingle on the eighth floor of an Edmonton office building," Gene says. The first little while was "rough," and she laughs as she recalls: "I used to look out of my window and wonder whether to jump or wait."

She waited. She soon won a lion's share of the customs work for the mushrooming oil industry. Within six months she was solidly on her feet as imported supplies for the industry began moving through customs to newly built warehouses.

Today, although her business is more diversified than originally, the oil industry still accounts for 50 per cent of her work. The story of Miss Gene Eby and associates, customs brokers, is also a family success story.

Gene now employs two men and two women in a spacious downtown office—this one on the ground floor. The two men are Mr. S. Eby, 66, her father, and Doug Eby, her 23-year-old brother.

Gene prevailed upon her father to join her in 1949 when she found her work becoming heavy. Mr. Eby left a wholesale drygoods firm with which he had been associated for 22 years as a top executive. "And for higher pay, at that," he says with a twinkle in his eye. Doug joined his sister in 1951 after coming out of school.

The family bond adds smooth-working harmony to the business. No one wastes anyone around, say all the Ebys. As Gene put it: "It's nice to have someone around you who can depend on." Conversely, Mr. Eby is "mighty proud" of the mark his enterprising daughter has made in business.

Gene finds relaxation in bridge, golf and cooking, being proud of the fact that she can "whomp up a good steak for supper."

Away from the office she maintains contact with the oil trade through membership in the Edmonton Desk and Derrick club, an educational organization for women in the petroleum and allied industries. She is a past president of the club.

Originating in the United States in 1949, the Association of Desk and Derrick clubs of North America now has 86 clubs with 8706 members in Canada. There are clubs in Edmonton, Calgary and Regina, and others are being formed at Montreal and Lloydminster, Sask. The Calgary club, with 250 members, is the association's fourth largest.

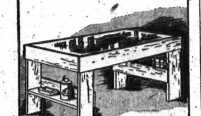

Barley Preference Changes
The Canadian grain mission which toured the Far East early this year found that Japan is now buying Canadian barley with preference to the two row types.

Only a year or so ago they favored two row grades but they have found that such crack and break during pressing, resulting in a lower yield of the finished product. The barley is pearled, steamed and pressed and then eaten when mixed with rice.

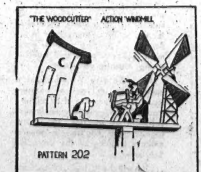

WRITING PROGRESSING
Writing of the official history of Saskatchewan is progressing at the University of Saskatchewan in preparation for the celebration next year of the province's golden jubilee.

PATTERN 254—
This coffee table has colorful embroidered material under a piece of ordinary window glass. This idea may be used to display and preserve pictures or maps of special interest and value. Flower prints and other designs cut out and pasted on square pieces of white paper give an effect of tiles when placed under glass. The sides of the table hold the glass firmly in place. The simplicity of construction adds a sturdy charm to the whole piece and highlights the interest of the top. The pattern for this table is included in the pocket of Useful Tables and Stands which will be postpaid for $1.50; or the table pattern may be ordered separately for 35c.

PATTERN 202—
Today's project is for boys from eight to eighty who like to make things that have almost no purpose except for amusement. About the only reason for making this chic side wind-mill is that it swivels on top of a post to indicate the direction of the wind. Meanwhile the funny little man appears to be saving wood at a terrific pace. This, of course, amuses everyone at first sight. The pattern is 17 by 22 inches and is covered with outlines for sawing the two down or so parts ready for assembling. Use whatever scrap material is handy. Black and white paints are suggested but use whatever you have. All metal fittings are to be found in your neighborhood hardware store. The pattern is a bargain at 35c.
